so Angie is the most special person in 0:06

my life she's the most special person

0:08

I've ever met I met Angie at Cornell

0:10

that's probably the best the best story

0:12

of my life so I was an engineering

0:15

student at Cornell living in a dorm that

0:19

was divided by gender and discipline so

0:22

I lived in the male engineering student

0:26

wing of the dormitory so every one of my 0:31

neighbors were both other men and they 0:35

were engineering students and I remember

0:37

one Saturday I was carrying a laundry

0:41

basket to go do my laundry and I'm 0:43

walking down the hallway where 0:45

everyone's an engineer and I heard music

0:51

coming out of one of my friends rooms

0:54

and you never hear music on this floor

0:57

so I walked by this room and the door

0:59

was open and there was music playing and

1:01

there was a my friend sitting at the

1:04

desk in his room I don't know how he was

1:07

doing differential equations or something but further in his room was

1:08

1:11

this woman dancing to the music with her

1:13

eyes closed with her arms up as if she

1:17

was dancing with an imaginary partner so

1:20

I when I saw this I quietly put my

1:23

basket down on the floor and then I

1:25

snuck into the room and I've slipped up

1:28

into her arms and started dancing with

1:30

her and she opened her eyes and I didn't

1:33

say a thing I I just kept dancing with

1:35

her as the music played and then when

1:38

the music stopped I said hi my name is

1:41

Marcus what's your name

1:42

and she said Angie I said well Angie I'm

1:45

so glad to meet you but I've got to go

1:46

do my laundry and that's how we met

1:50
