Dear Readers,

Along with the Executive Editorial Board and Editorial Staff, I am proud to present Volume Six of the Notre Dame Journal of International and Comparative Law. Volume Six continues our traditional focus on emerging issues of human rights, but this time with a distinct eye towards business. The Journal is privileged to publish five scholarly works from distinguished authors from many backgrounds and practice areas. The first three articles offer a continuation of many of the great discussions that occurred during the Journal's 2015 symposium, with a specific focus on National-Action Plans, their use and effectiveness in the face of modern humanitarian need. Our next article hones in on the intersection between human rights and corporate law. Our final article offers a poignant comparative analysis of election law, with a focus on Italy, a place very near to my heart.

Along with our distinguished scholarly articles, The Notre Dame Journal of International Law is pleased to share the contributions of our student note writers. This volume features four student notes whose topics include: FIFA and International Law, whistleblowers, the regulation of asteroid mining, and food additive and U.S./EU international trade respectively.

The 2015-2016 academic year represents a time of great change and great hope for the Journal. We have doubled our sized, increased our output, and found new avenues to publish and share our work with the world. It has been a great honor and privilege to serve as the Editor-in-Chief of the Journal for Volume Six. Finally, I must extend my deepest gratitude to Editorial Board and Staff for their tireless effort throughout the year.

In Notre Dame,

Anthony Calvano
Editor-in-Chief
