Week of February 25, 2014

News and Notes

On Monday, February 24, Amy Barrett discussed the intellectual history of originalism at IU Maurer Law School to the The Federalist Society.

Tonight, Martijn Cremers is the guest speaker for this week's Theology on Tap series at 6:30pm, Villa Macri, 225 Toscana Blvd, Granger. He will be discussing Wealth. Join him to share in food, fellowship and faith.

On Wednesday, Jay Tidmarsh will have lunch with students as part of the Professor Lecture Series program hosted by the SBA that entails intimate lunch gatherings between a professor or two and a handful of students to discuss topics of mutual interest.

Also on Wednesday, Jimmy Gurule will be speaking at FPAC's first meeting. He will be sharing his experiences as a state prosecutor and federal prosecutor. He will also give insight on starting a career in criminal law. This is also FPAC's first meeting, and the goal is to gain as much interest as possible in the new student organization. This meeting is sponsored by Career Development Office and FPAC.

John Nagle leads a discussion on environmental law with the Christian Legal Society on Wednesday, Feb. 26 at 12:30 in Room 2108.

Watch your email for the Law Library Newsletter. Another great issue coming to your inbox soon!

Bengal Bouts tonight at Joyce Center Field House @ 7:00PM. Three NDLS students made it to the semifinals. They are 3L Chris Hinman (146), 2L Gage O'Connel (162) and 3L Brian Ellixson, Captain (202).

They will discuss six papers that address what effect, if any, constitutional structure and separation of powers should have interpreters approaches to legislation and how different nations' structures may affect those implications. The day-long conference is organized by Jeffrey Pojanowski.

Dean's Bookshelf

I have been remiss in acknowledging some important recent contributions to the Dean's Bookshelf from Rick Garnett, Jay Tidmarsh, and Amy Barrett.

Amy's latest article was published recently by the Cornell Law Review. The cite is:

Amy Coney Barrett, Suspension and Delegation, 99 CORNELL L. REV. 251-326 (2014).

Rick contributed an essay presented at a conference at the University of San Diego. The cite is:

Richard W. Garnett, “The Freedom of the Church: (Towards) An Exposition, Translation, and Defense, 21 J. CONTEMP. L. ISSUES 33-57 (2013).

Jay also contributed a conference essay, this one presented at a joint program of the Sections on Litigation and on the Federal Courts at the AALS and published as part of a symposium issue of the University of Texas Review of Litigation. In addition, Jay contributed a copy of his book on class actions, published by LexisNexis. The cites are:

Jay Tidmarsh, Living in CAFA's World, 32 REV. LITIGATION 691-719 (2013);

Jay Tidmarsh, CLASS ACTIONS: FIVE PRINCIPLES TO PROMOTE FAIRNESS AND EFFICIENCY (LexisNexis 2014).

Thanks and congratulations to Amy, Rick, and Jay.
