Monday Morning Update
September 3 - September 9

NDLS,

What a weekend. In what should be a surprise to no one, 77,621 of my closest friends showed out in Notre Dame Stadium Saturday evening to celebrate my last name. I wanted to start off by saying, just, wow, y'all. I am continuously #humbled by your support of my existence.
The Irish did their part by manhandling Michigan and cruising to a 24-17 win over the Wolverines. Not to toot my own horn (which I will now do), but, unlike pretty much every single professional sports pundit, I correctly predicted the score in last week’s MMU. Go check, I'll wait.

Yes, I am a sports savant. Yes, I am personally thrilled about it. Yes, I will now retire and take my rightful thrown as national sports correspondent for the BBC’s American branch.

When I just called the BBC and asked to leverage this single instance of sports prediction gold into a gig, the kind man on the phone told me "never call this phone number again" and hung up. I like my chances.

More in the #FreshFreshContent section.

Go Irish,
Bill

Last week I sent out two corrections for the MMU - I apologize. One of the ways that y'all can help me cut down on potential future corrections is the following:

- Send your events to mondaymorningupdate@gmail.com, and not my personal or ND email.
- Include title, date, time, room, and other pertinent details in that e-mail, so I do not have to hunt you down for other details
- Pray that I do not mess it up. I still might mess it up.

Thursday Limerick

I have learned this week that no one knows what a limerick is. Normally, I'd blame myself and accept my faults. Thing is, I don't blame myself. I paid attention in poetry class, y'all! And I listen to Wait Wait... Don't Tell Me! Limericks are a very fun little riddle for you each week. Also, I'm restricted by ABA rules, so.

If you cannot solve it, ask me.

There's no reason to get into your druthers

Have you ever said such things to your mothers?

So slide in my DMs
Some late late night P.M.

Because everyone knows you at _______'_!

That Delicious #Fresh #Content You've Been Dreaming About

Hello, my children. After a few weeks in school, we're settling in. The Org fair was last week. 1Ls are starting to understand what a cold call is. Each of them was forced to aimlessly wander the library trying to figure out where things are. Every single club is serving Chipotle or pizza for lunch this week. The Linebacker Lounge still exists. What a time to be alive.
I'm sure you're expecting something September-related here. The problem with this assumption is that I got over my Green Day phase around junior year of high school. So September's beginning is, at least, equally as important as its end. I'll have my PSL with half the sugar, please.

Aside from the return of football (American), end of fútbol (American) and beginning of füßball (European), the greatest part of this time of year is horror movies. And I mean both kinds. I mean the truly terrifying that keep you in your chair and up at night: It, The Shining, Paranormal Activity, The Ring, A Quiet Place. But I also mean the truly terrible, not-scary, confusing, "How-on-Earth-did-they-get-funding-for-this" horror movies: Scary Movie 5, Prom Night, It Follows, How to Lose a Guy in Ten Days.

There's a few promising movies coming up this year. Among the ones I'm looking forward to:

- Ahockalypse
  - A recently-crowned hockey team fights zombies.
- Trench 11
  - Allied soldiers in WWII discover Nazi Zombies in a cave.
- The Nun
  - Origin story behind The Conjuring that examines a priest and young nun to investigate the death of another nun.
- Mandy
  - A HORROR MOVIE NOT ABOUT MANDY MOORE. INSTEAD, NICOLAS CAGE (!!!!!!) AND ANDREA RISEBOROUGH WHEN RISEBOROUGH'S CHARACTER GETS KIDNAPPED. Lots of blood (!!).
- Apostle
  - A movie about cults and deception. Sweet, sweet deception and betrayal.
- Halloween
  - A re-make of the classic film. A must-see, honestly.

AMC has $5 movies on Tuesdays for its members. Get that membership and get you some horror.

1L OF THE WEEK
The 1L of the week is Cassidy Flood! Cassidy was selected this week because one of her friends threw her under the bus and forced her to answer my questions (but really Cassidy is the big winner here because my questions are inherently fantastic). Cassidy was a pal and answered my questions, and is therefore deserving of free coffees from you, the people.

Q: Where did you attend undergrad?
A: University of Georgia.

Q: Where is your hometown?
A: Marietta, Georgia

Q: What did you do before law school?
A: I was at UGA doing history and English. History was mainly focused on Early Modern Europe. They don't really define modernity so you can just say World War II. That's an easier answer.

Q: What did you do this summer?
A: Um, I went to Europe and that's pretty much it. I have a friend that goes to school in London so I went and saw her so we travelled around. We went to Berlin & Malaga, Spain. It's better than reading, which is what I'm doing right now.

Q: How much wood do you think woodchucks chuck?
A: How much wood would a woodchuck chuck if a wouldchuck could chuck wood? They can't chuck wood. They just can't!

Q: What's your favorite Kanye West song and why?
A: OH! I don't really listen to Kanye West! I was very invested in the Kim-Taylor thing.... I do know that Kanye loves Kanye, though.

Q: What's the coolest animal you have seen?
A: That I've seen.... hmmm... I think otters because they hold hands when they sleep. I don't know if that's the coolest animal around, but you can definitely put a cute otter picture in here.*

*unbeknownst to Cassidy, I have spent FAR too many hours staring at otters spinning around holding hands at the Shedd Aquarium in Chicago. A) they are absolutely adorable; B) I need one.

Q: If orange is the new black, and black was the new white, is orange actually any good at all?
A: I don't know but I would just like to say that the seasons of OITNB come out too late so that I cannot even keep up with the show. You know what I mean? You can't binge watch it because you can't keep up with it and remember what happened in the old season. Maybe that's just a me problem.

Q: Do you have anything else you'd like to say to all of your fans?
A: I don't have any fans.

Q: Who do you nominate to talk to me next week because of my personal fear of picking a random 1L to ask?
A: You need to pick Andrew Franklin. One - because he's interesting and a twin. Zach was a twin, I'm a twin, and Andrew is a twin. You didn't pick up on that because your questions aren't in-depth enough. You don't ask good enough questions.

Look. As I've said before, my questions are, simply, sublime. My feelings however, are not immune to harm. I am a mere mortal. Sad!

#3LOL OF THE WEEK (Hiatus this week)
3LOL of the week is going to take a break this week. Instead, if you're looking for a break from your weekly heavy-heavy does of law-mandated reading, here's a few other suggestions of reads of various lengths:

- The American Nightmare: 10 Years After the Housing Collapse
  - Desiree Stennett and Lisa Rowan share the stories of lives forever changed after losing homes to foreclosure at the height of the financial crisis. So many families haven’t woken up from what still feels like their own personal nightmare, even though more than 9 million Americans are having the same dream.

- Why We Cross the Border in El Paso
  - A personal essay in which Mexican-American writer Victoria Blanco reflects on change over the years at the border between El Paso, Texas, and Cuidad, Juárez, as immigration patrolling has become increasingly restrictive, and how the Rio Grande, which lies between the two towns, has begun drying up as a result of climate change.
