LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

Dear Readers;

The Notre Dame Journal of International & Comparative Law saw its first publication last academic year. Due to the hardwork and dedication of its founding members as well as the continued interest from the faculty, staff, and students of Notre Dame Law School, the Administration has approved the Journal as an official journal of Notre Dame. It is now the fifth new member of the Notre Dame Journals, all reputable publications. It is certainly an honor to stand alongside the other prestigious journals at NDLS and the dozens of international law journals worldwide.

In the spirit of global environmentalism and the modern trend toward free access to legal publications, we designed JICL to be a leading example of a new form of legal scholarship. We designed JICL as an online journal, which we hope will provide timely commentary on the dynamic field of international law. We have drawn upon the expertise of our international law faculty as well as the strength of our exceptional international law programs to establish this unique journal.

With the establishment of this journal, NDLS joins the ranks of dozens of top law schools with international law journals, and we hope this journal will contribute to the development and appreciation of international, comparative, and human rights law.

Thank you for your time and interest in international law.

In Notre Dame,

Manasi Raveendran
Editor in Chief
