GENERAL ANNOUNCEMENTS:

Message from your Editor:

I hope you have enjoyed my MMUs as much as I have enjoyed bringing them to your inbox each week. Hopefully at some point it made you a smile, a laugh, or provided helpful tidbits of information. Thank you for electing me as your editor and I look forward to whatever the fab Lizzy Forzley brings to the table next year. Have a wonderful summer & I'll see you all in the Bend soon :') 3Ls make us proud.

ND DAY-TODAY! Consider Donating to WLF:

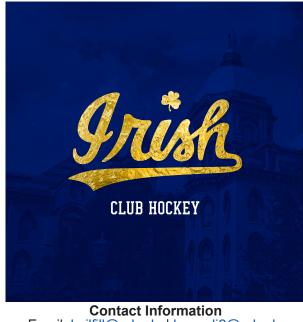

The Notre Dame Women's Legal Forum exists to increase awareness and understanding of legal issues affecting women and of issues affecting women lawyers. Our mission is to foster growth through educational events, service opportunities, and the promotion of meaningful discussion within the law school community. One of our signature programs is the Women's Empowerment Stipend, through which some of our members are selected to receive funding for their summer employment. Each recipient is someone who (1) pursues unpaid/public interest work over the summer, and (2) has been dedicated to advancing our mission of empowering, educating, and supporting women at NDLS and beyond. We appreciate any gift you are able to make! You can find the link to donate HERE. ND Day will conclude today at 11:59 PM.

Previous stipend recipient, Stephanie Wong

Notre Dame Club Hockey Looking for Coach:

The Notre Dame Club Hockey team competes in Division III of the ACHA. After our most successful season in program history, in which we qualified for the National Tournament in St. Louis, our head coach has stepped down. In the past, we have had members of our coaching staff who were students at the ND Law School. If you are interested in joining our coaching staff or simply looking to get back into the game, please contact us, and we would be glad to talk further about our team, our commitment level, and our future objectives.

LILLA IN LONDON:

Lilla is getting senti with it being her last few days in London :(

SPORT REPORT:

Good morning #DukeAndIrishNation,

Well ladies and gentlemen, this is sadly the last MMU sports column of the semester, but it certainly won't be the least, as we have one full week of roasting to get through, and boy, was it a full one. In the realm of the National Basketball Association, Mr. Joshua Lacoste took a trip down to Gumbo Land to watch his New Orleans Pelicans in the playoffs, failing to heed the warning that all Notre Dame law students who travel to New Orleans for basketball games in April will leave disappointed. Unfortunately, Mr. Lacoste lost both on and off the court, as he watched the Pelicans lose and then proceeded to get booed by the entire Pelicans stadium in a halftime contest which he ALSO proceeded to lose. Hey at least Allie LaForce tweeted about you! Maybe she'll follow you back!

author's note: this is a true story. This Allie LaForce tweet shown above is actually about Josh. Better luck next time, bro!

Speaking of big Ls in the Big Easy, who knew that, not only would I see Coach K's last game ever in New Orleans, but also I would have seen Jay Wright's last game, too! My condolences to Jess Wolfert and Erin Gormley who were both looking dejected and glum all week with the news of Coach Wright's unexpected retirement. I feel your pain, ladies! That leaves the major question up for debate: which coach is the face of college basketball? It's not Bill Self or Calipari because they're serial cheaters; it's not Izzo or Boeheim because they're serial underachievers; and it's not Tony Bennett even though he's just such a good-looking man. As much as I hate to admit this to Caroline but the best coach in college basketball right now is probably Baylor's Scott Drew. Congrats on this tremendous achievement, Caroline!

Also, the Blue/Gold game was Saturday. I watched most of it on Peacock and was excited to finally see all the Drew Pyne stans (looking at you Mr. Goldman) get proven wrong once again. Not only did this guy with probably the strangest, most undeserving cult following of all time come out wearing the Ezekiel Elliott-style cut-off jersey that he did NOT wear well at all, but also Pyne looked extremely unimpressive, throwing three interceptions in one half and just generally looking bad. It was good to see the ~30% of Notre Dame fans who were "Pining for Pyne" all year last year get proven very wrong yet again. Let's hope Mr. Buchner is better because Notre Dame football can't afford another year where they don't know who their quarterback is; if that trend continues, then that will be trouble for the Irish.

Thank you all for giving me the opportunity to roast you all (and myself) this semester. It was a pleasure, and once again I hope you prepare for your finals better than Duke prepared for the onslaught of players leaving for the draft, leaving next year's Duke team with only six competent scholarship players (yes, that means Duke will NOT win the championship again next year – don't @ me!)

1L OF THE WEEK:

Our 1L of the week is Caroline Buthe! Grab this hometown girl some Starbucks as she enters into her final week of 1L. Just make sure you drive around when she's attempting to parallel park on Angela!

Q. Where are you from/where did you attend undergrad? I'm from New Jersey and graduated from Cornell University in 2019.

Q. Finish this sentence... Life would be boring without_____ Friends :')

Q. What kind of first impression do people commonly get from you? Is it accurate? I've frequently gotten that I always look angry. It's not accurate, my default expression unfortunately just looks like that.

Q. Superhero movies are ruining cinema. Agree or disagree? I'm not a huge movie person, so I'll sit this one out.

Q. What is some act you believe to be good manners, but some people do not do? It's good manners to GO AROUND me when I'm trying to parallel park. This is much more polite than waiting for me. I am physically incapable of parallel parking when I know I have an audience.

Q. Vacation in a rural spot on the coast or a busy urban city? Rural spot on the coast. Hate cities, only reason I agreed to living in South Bend.

Q. If you could spend the day living in a TV series, what would it be? (why) Gilmore Girls. Ideal small town energy.

Q. Do Apps help you or waste your time?

100% waste. Someone please delete Twitter off my phone before finals begin.

Q. Anything you'd like to say to your fans?

~Diamonds are made under pressure~ Good luck everyone!

Q. Has it hit you that you're almost done with your 1L year? Yes, been thinking about the end of 1L since August.

2Ls TAKING Ls:

This week's "2L taking Ls" story comes from Will Warnisher! Will, all in all this is still a great tragedy to tell your grandkids. This is also further evidence that bad luck comes in threes. If it makes you feel any better, I've been turned down at Brothers for not meeting their high standards for physical appearance. I believe the same night, someone pulled out a gun, but hey- at least they weren't wearing sweatpants! Stay classy South B.

Now for our feature presentation:

I've took a number of "Ls" during my time in law school, but none of them stand out as much as the following:

November 7, 2020. At first glance that date might not mean much to you. But for those of you out there who think ND Football is the rough equivalent of a religion, you will recall that date as the historic day in which our Fighting Irish fought hard to beat No. 1 Clemson, and the whole student body gloriously rushed the field. It was a very special day, and no doubt, one which will go down in history. It was a modern day David and Goliath story. We could all feel the suffering leading up the end final whistle. It had been a tough year for everyone on campus. No one thought ND had a chance at winning that game, and yet, at last, everyone got a taste of sweet, sweet victory...everyone but me.

During the days leading up to the game, being the realist that I can be, I thought it would be a great idea to sell my ticket to someone else. I figured we were probably going to lose the game, it would be too cold (literally) and painful to watch our guys loose out there; plus, I could really use the extra time to outline (ha!). This was an odd move for me, as I usually pick fun/friends over studies, but I was in the mood to be responsible. So, I stayed in my apartment and studied as I could her the roaring cheers emanating from the stadium during the first three quarters of the game. The last quarter of the game, I couldn't take it anymore, and I met with a few friends at a bar to catch the last bit of the game. The energy at the bar was intense, wild, and glorious. We watched our guys take the V in overtime. I was happy to watch them win, but deep down all I could think of was how stupid it was of me to sell my ticket earlier that week. I could've been there live, witnessing history! But it got worse that...

After the game was over, my groups of friends and I decided to meet everyone else who was leaving the stadium at another bar to continue celebrating the victory. I offered to drive, since I parked the car near the bar, and I wasn't planning on drinking much that night. They appreciated the gesture, but my car was nowhere to be found. We looked around the parking lot, and lo and behold, we figured out my car had been towed (pro tip: don't park in a resident's parking spot without a pass at Overlook on a game weekend). Devastated as I was, my friends offered to give me a ride to pick up my car. The tow pound was kinda far, but it felt a million times further knowing that I was keeping my group from celebrating the big win. After paying a pretty penny to get my car back, and once we finally arrived to the second bar after our long detour, I get stopped at the door by the bouncers because I was not complying with the bar's dress code. Pro tip #2: Don't try to go into Brother's at night wearing sweatpants (not even on a game day!!).

At last, I drove my resigned self back to my apartment where I sadly ate some chips by myself, thinking about all that had just happened, and dreading the day when my kids and grandkids would if I was there when the students rushed the field for the Clemson game.

ASKA3L:

This week's 3L is Katie Pallesen. As a recent visitor for a wedding, Nebraska isn't half bad if you're into over-hyped football teams and cornfields as the sole backdrop for any photo.

Question(s) & Answers:

Q. What's the most underrated thing about Nebraska? 3L Advice: Nebraska has RUNZA! For those who don't know, it's a yummy bread pocket filled with beef, cabbage, onions, and some delicious seasoning. I crave it very regularly, and I feel like it doesn't get the national recognition it deserves.

Q. Does your husband know how to kill a cow? 3L Advice: Well, yes.

Q.The carriage industry is abusive - true, or false?3L Advice: True. I learned of the terrors of the carriage industry only recently- last semester actually. This has troubled me ever since my good friend, Emily Dufner, introduced me to the truth while roaming the streets of Nashville, Tennessee.
