Foreword

The opening of the schoolyear at the University of Notre Dame, on the 16th of September, 1930, will mark the beginning of a new era in the College of Law. The new law building, costing $350,000.00, a beautiful structure of Gothic type and of most up-to-date construction, will be ready for use. It is a three-story building, 157 feet long and 104 feet wide, having an assembly hall for 350 persons, four classrooms, a courtroom, three seminar rooms, a discussion room, and a library reading room, 50 x 100 feet, with stack room additional for 35,000 volumes. Offices are provided for the dean, the librarian, the members of the faculty, and "The Lawyer," the periodical of the law school.

The College of Law at Notre Dame will begin the year not only with a new building but also with an enlarged faculty. The requirement of training preparatory for admission has been increased from two years of college to ninety hours of acceptable credit, or three years of college work. The College of Arts and Letters and the College of Law offer a combined six-year program leading to the two degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Laws. Law students of the second and the third year will hereafter enjoy the privileges of graduate students.

The faculty for the coming year has been strengthened by the addition of two full-time teachers, Judge William M. Cain, of Omaha, Nebraska, and Professor William D. Rollison, of Cambridge, Massachusetts. For the year 1930-31 there will be six full-time professors and five part-time instructors and lecturers.

No faculty roll of the Notre Dame College of Law would be complete without the name of Col. William Hoynes, Dean Emeritus of the law school. As founder and for forty years head of the institution, he is still most keenly interested in its progress and development.
