CCHR J.S.D. Program Explores Latin American Constitutionalism

The Center for Civil and Human Rights has entered into a partnership with its J.S.D. students to convene an innovative conference around the issues of Latin American constitutional structure.

“New Trends in Latin American Constitutionalism” will bring together prominent scholars from law and the social sciences, fostering a creative dialogue by giving voice to those with diverging philosophical views. Organized entirely by the J.S.D. students and supported by CCHR, The Kellogg Institute for International Studies, and the Program on Constitutional Structure, conference topics will range from protection of individual identities within a community context to legal pluralism as it concerns human rights.

The conference will begin with an opening session and keynote address on Thursday, April 11 in 1130 Eck Hall, and continue throughout the day Friday, April 12 with individual panel discussions in 3140 Eck Hall.
