AUBREY DIAMOND RETIRES

Aubrey Diamond, a mainstay of our London Programme for almost two decades, has announced his retirement. This gentleman of impeccable speech and gentle wit joined the Programme as an adjunct in 1982. He co-directed the Programme from 1987 to 1998. During that time, he lured many prominent academics to our faculty roster.

Aubrey also brought to our Programme his own distinguished professional and academic career. Having served as a law commissioner for five years, he became a member of the Council of the Law Society in 1976, a position he held for seventeen years. He directed the prestigious Institute of Advanced Legal Studies, University of London, for the decade ending 1986. The Society of Public Teachers of Law made him its president for 1985-86.

Born in 1923, Aubrey served in the RAF from 1943 to 1947. He earned both his LL.B. (1950) and his LL.M. (1956) at the University of London. He began his work as a solicitor in 1951. His achievement in the profession and in Great Britain found fitting support in his selection as Honorary Queen's Counsel.

On November 19 the Programme honored him with a special dinner at the Oxford and Cambridge Club in London. Among those present at the dinner: his wife Eva, Roger Jacobs, Jack Pratt, Programme director Geoffrey Bennett, and several current and former members of the faculty. Aubrey received a Notre Dame clock to mark his signal service.

At the dinner, he explained how he came to study law: After his service during the war, he realized that he needed a degree to enable him to advance his status. During “information night” at the London School of Economics, he took a brochure for the degree in economics. He immediately noted that five years would be required to earn the degree on a part-time basis (Aubrey needed to continue working and so could attend classes only at night). He asked whether any degree could be earned in three years, part-time. The representative said "LL.B.", and the rest is history!

Aubrey and Eva hope to stop by the South Bend campus in the spring, visiting from their home in Florida. They have sold their London house and will soon move into a stairless flat.

Thanks, Aubrey, for your countless and superb contributions. Whenever the history of the London Programme gets told, be sure your name will occupy a prominent role in that telling. Best wishes from all of us at NDLS.

ND TAX AND ESTATE PLANNING INSTITUTE CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY

This Fall marked the 25th anniversary of the Notre Dame Tax and Estate Planning Institute. The fact that a thousand professionals registered for the conference this year testifies eloquently to the outstanding success of the program. The two-day conference took place at the Century Center in South Bend.

Chief catalyst for the program has been Regis Campfield, former law prof at NDLS and now a member of the faculty of the law school at Southern Methodist University in Dallas. His wife, Mary, plays a crucial role in the seminar’s implementation. The proceeds of the Institute go to NDLS.

Congratulations to the Institute, to Regis and Mary, and to everyone else involved in this marvelous program.

LISA SCHILTZ
INAUGURATES
"FACULTY TEA"

On October 7, in the Executive MBA Lounge of the College of Business Administration, Lisa Schiltz and Tom Cosimano, of the College of Business Administration, addressed the issue "Are Banks Obsolete? Should They Be?" Historically, banks have played a unique role in our nation's economy. Over the past decades, however, other industries, unburdened by the same social responsibilities, have encroached upon much of banking's traditional business. Congress is currently debating significant financial reforms. Professors Schiltz and Cosimano generated the first "storm in a teapot."

The "faculty tea", a new event, responds to a desire for more interdisciplinary discussion at ND. Each month the Tea will take place in a different college, offer snacks and beverages in a congenial setting, and feature brief discussions by faculty from two colleges, on a topic of timely interest.

NEWS FROM THE LEGAL AID CLINIC

Twenty-one interns are enrolled in the Legal Aid Clinic this semester, an additional ten in Professor Shaffer's Law and Poverty Seminar, and another ten in the Immigration Clinic. These interns have spent a great deal of time either in court or preparing for court since the start of the semester.

Christina Majewski and Judy Fox represented a young mother in a custody suit. After a half-day evidentiary hearing, the client was awarded temporary custody of the child. Christina also has been busy working with Eileen Doran on a case involving contested visitation rights. In this case Christina assists a mother whose ex-husband allegedly physically abused their two small children. Christina negotiated an agreement between the parties to attend anger-management and parenting classes to protect the best interests of the children.

John Kuehn and Marissa Kelly have finalized two dissolutions involving domestic violence. Both cases began over the summer.

Judy Fox, working with former interns Jim Schwartz and Katherine Plante, have obtained a settlement worth over $12,000, as well as judgments for additional sums, for an elderly client. The woman had been pressured into signing a mortgage on her home. The documents contained a Truth-in-Lending violation, as well as violations of contract law. She never received proceeds of her loan. Ryan Blackstone-Gardner has assumed responsibility for the case and will work through the final stages of the settlement. Working with Professor Shaffer as part of the Law and Poverty Seminar, he also will help the woman in making a will and a durable power of attorney.

Angela Scott has been in court several times. In St. Joseph, Michigan, she and Judy Fox helped a client to establish paternity of her child. Angela has also represented grandparents, legal guardians of their two grandchildren, in negotiations with the children's paternal grandmother, who was seeking visitation rights. Angela and Eileen Doran reached an agreement with former intern Rochelle Myers, who represented the paternal grandmother.

Several interns have helped clients establish guardianships over disabled adult children. Ed Caspar, Caitlin Murray and Pam Hoekwate recently worked with Eileen Doran to file these guardianships. All of these cases were referred to the Clinic by Logan Center.

Interns Angie Scott, Wilda Wahpepah, David Giles, Tanya Lenko, Katherine Pauls, Tim Schank and Caitlin Murray are working with Eileen Doran as the court-appointed guardian ad litem in contested custody and guardianship matters. In the process, all are developing their skills in interviewing children as well as parents.

David Giles and Eileen Doran obtained SSI benefits for an eleven-year-old boy. The Clinic has worked on this case for more than three years—from an initial hearing before an Administrative Law Judge, through a successful appeal to the District Court for Northern Indiana, and finally on remand to the ALJ. The grandmother, the Clinic's client, was relieved, but said she would really miss working with the Clinic. The Clinic also helped her with the adoption of one of her grandchildren, custody of two others, a food-stamp appeal, and a will.

Eileen also recently attended a two day workshop of the State Pro Bono Commission to work on implementation of the new IOLTA Program and pro-bono requirements for attorneys.

The United States Department of Justice joined in the Tobacco Wars on September 23, when it filed a massive civil suit under RICO and other theories against the major participants in the tobacco industry. The decision did not come easily. Apparently, according to Bob Blakey, it took pressure from the White House and Capitol Hill, where Senators Ken Conrad and Edward Kennedy weighed in, urging Attorney General Janet Reno to act. The Wall Street Journal (Sept. 24, 1999) reports that a "Tiger Team" was also employed: Professors Larry Tribe (on the Medical Recovery Act) and Einer Elhauge (on antitrust) of Harvard, and Bob Blakey (on RICO) of NDLS.

Bob was featured in an article in the October 28 Scholastic Magazine, entitled The Great Smoke Out: The Untouchable, Part II, for his work in connection with the Department of Justice's RICO suit against the tobacco industry.

Bob was featured in an article in the South Bend Tribune on November 19. The title: ND Professor Helping on Tobacco Suit.

The news on the fate of his other efforts to seek relief against the industry for Taft-Harley Act Funds (created to assure health benefits for millions of blue-collar workers) is not so sanguine. The Third, Second and Ninth Circuits—in that order—rejected suits by Funds, though by varying and inconsistent rationales. Bob too, he reports, received a "chilly reception" when he argued one appeal before the Fifth Circuit on November 3. At best, his argument was a "Hail Mary pass"—it's tough to get one Circuit to disagree with three others. Hope remains, he insists: Appeals are pending in the Seventh and Tenth Circuits.

Bob recently had accepted entries on "Mafia" and "RICO and the First Amendment" in, respectively, the Encyclopedia of Chicago History and the Supplement to the Encyclopedia of the United States Constitution.

Bob was interviewed on November 8 by Towers Productions, which is filming a piece for A & E, tentatively entitled, "The Mob in Chicago After Capone."

Bob was interviewed for a program entitled "The Warren Commission," which appeared on November 22 on the History Channel.
