2-1-1954

Foreword

Joseph O'Meara
LEGISLATIVE INVESTIGATIONS: SAFEGUARDS FOR WITNESSES:

FOREWORD

Our plans for the Symposium postulate that a free and independent legislature is the hallmark of democracy, that the power of investigation is essential to proper discharge of legislative responsibilities, but that the investigative power has been abused\(^1\) and that it is the obligation of the bar to find an answer to the resulting problem. It is our purpose to examine the problem objectively, without rancor or partisanship. We recognize, however, that abuses have occurred and the whole point of the Symposium is to make a contribution to the solution of the problem they have created.

Goaded by fear and hatred of Communism, some at times condone and even applaud abusive treatment of witnesses in legislative inquiries. But, whatever the provocation or seeming advantage, surrender of principle is the death of Justice and, without Justice, there is chaos or totalitarian dictatorship and, in either case, total disregard of the dignity and destiny of man. “In all that we do to combat subversion,” said President Eisenhower last week, “it is imperative that we protect the basic rights of loyal American citizens." ² It is, however, impossible to protect the basic rights of loyal American citizens, as no doubt the President fully understands, unless we protect the basic rights of every man, woman and child in America. For no man’s rights are safe unless all men’s rights are respected.

\(^1\) See, for example, Senator Irving M. Ives, \textit{In Place of Congressional Circuses}, N.Y. Times Magazine Aug. 27, 1950, p. 20 ("... the chief cause of the general disrepute into which Congressional inquiries have fallen — let us admit it outright —

From earliest times the legal profession has resisted oppression and oppressors. It faces now a challenge as insistent as any in its proud history. One aspect of the challenge we confront today: how to assure due process of law for witnesses in legislative investigations without unduly hampering legislative functions.

This is not a problem to be solved by denunciations, emotional appeals or catchwords. It demands hard thinking by all who love and serve the Law. The responsibility rests on the law schools no less than on the practicing bar. Today’s Symposium attests recognition here at Notre Dame of this joint responsibility.

Our Symposium reflects, moreover, the eloquence and zeal of the distinguished lawyer who will preside, for it was a speech by him which begot this meeting.³ I am proud to ³ Entitled, A Call to Leadership, the address was delivered April 18, 1952 before the Southwestern Legal Foundation in Dallas, Texas. See also Gossett, Are We Neglecting Constitutional Liberty? A Call to Leadership, 38 A.B.A.J. 817 (1952); Editorial, 38 A.B.A.J. 844 (1952).